The first solar power system for the island was set up way back in 2000, an incredible 24 years ago. Subsequently two other systems were put in place over the years to replace obsolete and damaged technology. The very harsh environment on the island is not kind to technology and the solar systems age rapidly, as do other equipment.

Given that Seychelles is a tropical country receiving large amounts of sunshine - an average 6.9 hours of sunshine per day, and seven hours on average per year, according to the local meteorological office - there is great potential to replace at least some of the current oil-generated (and polluting) electricity with solar energy systems.
